The 25th edition of Super Bock Super Rock represents the reunion between Meco area in South of Lisbon and the most authentic Festival of the summer. With the beach next door and an even more relaxed atmosphere, the 2019 edition of the festival is set to be one of the best ever. And, of course, also because of Music.

After Lana Del Rey announcement last week, now there are two British talents being confirmed on the line up of the festival: The 1975 and Metronomy promise to conquer Super Bock Super Rock audiences and are building up the line up for 18 July.

THE 1975

It is already known that the British are reliable when it comes to delivering tastefully made pop / rock music and Manchester is a city that already carries a quality seal at that level. The 1975 are identified with this good British tradition and are one of the most captivating projects in recent years.

The talent on this band comes from Matthew Healy, Ross MacDonald, Adam Hann and George Daniel. The success began within the UK, but the songs are so good that it did not take long until themes like "The City", "Chocolate" or "Sex" conquered the indie hearts of the whole world.

The year 2018 brought a record that has marked the career of The 1975: "A Brief Inquiry Into Online Relationships". The critical sense is there, increasingly sharp, and the musical eclecticism also, increasingly integrated in the own worldview of these English. Criticism is yielding - Pitchfork has given it a rating of 8.5 / 10, Time magazine puts it in its top 10 albums of the year, the Consequence of Sound in its top 20 albums of the year, DYI gives it 5/5 describing it as "a bombastic and immaculately constructed portrait of modern life," to highlight only a few - and the songs, these, remain a wonder, despite the risks - just listen to "Love It If We Made It" or "Sincerity Is Scary" to want to hear everything else. On 18 July, at Super Bock Super Rock, there's no way people would miss this show.

Metronomy

Joe Mount, the leader of Metronomy, has always been good at arousing emotions in others, even when he started performing as a DJ at certain clubs in Brighton. Other projects followed, but success came only with the Metronomy.

"Pip Paine (Pay the £ 5000 You Owe)", the debut album, went unnoticed, but Joe Mount continued to explore the studio, committed to marrying electronics with pop, almost alone and inspired by names like Prince.

The burst of popularity at Joe's talent level would only happen with "The English Riviera", released in 2011. The more pop arrangements on compositions like "The Look" and "Everything Goes My Way" have won audiences and critics and put the Metronomy on the front line of the indie bands with vocation for the dance floors. "Love Letters" followed the same path and the last album, "Summer 08", released in 2016, marks the arrival to adulthood, with the courage to approach the shadows of the past, but never losing the lightness that characterizes them.

With a lot of memory and enamored by the pop wealth of the 80s, the British irony of the lyrics does not leave the body immobile: the invitation to dance is subtle, but irresistible. "Old Skool", "Hang Me Up to Dry" and "Back Together" are songs to fix, dance and ask for already on 18 July in the next edition of Super Bock Super Rock.
